This year, the area of cotton crop cultivation in eastern Syria (Jazira) was more than 160 thousand acres, according to the Directorate of Plant Production in Jazira region of the so-called Syrian Democratic Forces SDF. The Directorate confirmed that the cotton harvest is good this year and free of insect infections, except for small areas that will not affect production in general. SDF opened 3 centers to receive the crops from farmers in Al-Hasakeh, Raqqa, and Deir ez-Zor, and set the price of 1 kilogram of cotton at 4,300 Syrian pounds. Information sources confirm a decrease in green areas in the Syrian Jazira area, considered the food basket in Syria. These areas have decreased due to the decline in rainfall annually and the high costs of irrigation agriculture. However, serious concern remains about the occurrence of an environmental and food disaster, considering groundwater and wells consumption indicators in the region.
