Livelihood

According to the United Nations, after exhausting all options amid extremely limited resources, the World Food Programme (WFP) decided to prioritize 3 million Syrians who cannot survive from week to week without food assistance. This decision was made instead of continuing to assist 5.5 million people and completely running out of food aid by October 2023. According to the same source, over the past two years, the World Food Programme (WFP) has taken all possible measures to make the most of available resources and continue providing assistance to those most in need. This included a gradual reduction in the individual food ration size, which has now reached half of the recommended amount.
